TAX YEAR

BUSINESS (for these expenses)

The IRS allows one to take "usual and ordinary" expenses that are not considered extravagant nor is reimbursed, against income. Included below are some of the more common categories (ALL CAPS / BOLD) used by the IRS for reporting expenses; the parentheticals are examples of some things that might be listed in that category. Where you categorize a particular expense is usually not as important as knowing where you record that expense. EXAMPLE1: You may list your business cards under OFFICE SUPPLIES while another person may list their business card expense under ADVERTISING & PUBLICITY. Your personal recordkeeping should record where you have categorized an expense. Go through your receipts and recordkeeping - grouping your expenses by the categories listed here and simply record the total for that category in the space provided. If you have questions on which category to use for an expense, list that expense separately.

DO NOT COMBINE BUSINESSES/PROFESSIONS/OCCUPATIONS/JOBS ON A SINGLE SHEET. You must prepare a SEPARATE expense sheet for each business where you have expenses. Likewise, your spouse must have their own and separate sheet if they have expenses - even if in the same business/profession/occupation/job. EXAMPLE2: You are a glass blower and you are an actor - you will have two expense sheets - one for your glass blowing and one for being an actor. If your spouse is an actor and has a multi-level marketing business, your spouse will have two expense sheets - one for being an actor and one for the multi-level marketing business. The two of you will have a total of 4 expense sheets.

Do NOT provide receipts or copies of receipts unless requested
